The School of Veterinary and Life Sciences ("VLS") was formed in January 2013 from an amalgamation of the Schools of Veterinary and Biomedical Science, Biological Sciences and Biotechnology and Environmental Science. The combination of these individually strong areas has resulted in a new and enlarged School with major strengths in teaching and research across the whole of the life sciences.

The Role

The School actively pursues a cross-disciplinary approach to research and teaching. It has excellent relationships with the animal industries, government and the wider community, and active research interactions with local, national and overseas institutions. We are looking for a highly motivated individual capable of teaching animal and veterinary science students the principles and practices associated with animal production systems, particularly in relation to cattle and sheep.

For further information about this position, please refer to the Position Description.

Skills and Experience

The applicant will have a strong research record in animal production systems and meat science and a track record of collaboration with fellow researchers and industry. Preference will be given to candidates with an agricultural science degree or related discipline, a demonstrated capacity for team interaction, evidence for the ability to develop an independent research program, successful applications for external research funding, evidence of peer-reviewed publications, and a track record of postgraduate student supervision.
